James,

Good to hear from ya. Appreciate the articles as well. Things have been alright here for the most part. I haven't been hearing about any big shootings or anything on the news, but these incidents usually have some space between them. Usually people will commit suicide after they do something like that to escape getting arrested and having to go through that hassle of a trial. Not everybody does this though, like Holmes, the dude that shot up the theatre, he was taken in alive.

If someone gets to that point in life, like I was, you really don't care about what happens anymore. I had a nice car and some savings built up, and a good home life, but I was very tired of it all. I found society to be a sham, very few will have happy lives, and hard work only goes so far in reality.

I think you mentioned several times that you were going to be kicked out of school, I assume that it's from financial trouble? These things happen to the best of people, some people try to pick themselves back up and try something else, some people get back at society in other ways.

Did you ever buy a car? I had a friend who purchased an older model honda civic, I wanna say it was a late 1998-1999 model. It was priced at $900. He drove it for 2 years before he even had a problem with it, and that was a simple dead starter, he got it fixed for under $200. Anyway if you find a car let me know.
